

Beeronomics 2015

Seattle, WA

September 8-9

BEERONOMICS provides a forum to exchange ideas and present high-quality economic research related to the economics of beer, brewing and related activities. The 2015 Beeronomics conference will encompass a wide array of topics including the economics of production, international and interregional trade, industrial organization, marketing, consumption, policy and regulation, economic history, law and economics, and macroeconomics.

Seattle boasts one of the country's largest concentrations of breweries, and with good reason. Three-fourths of the nation's hops — one of beer's major ingredients — are produced in the nearby Yakima Valley. The area's pristine sources of mountain spring water and other fresh local ingredients make it an ideal brewing ground.

Plans for the conference include beer tastings, pub tours and a post-conference visit to Yakima, where most of Washington's hops are produced.

For more information watch the Beeronomics2015.com web site, or contact us at beeronomics2015@gmail.com

Tom Marsh and Jill McCluskey, Co-Chairs
Washington State University